

Baby sign language book giveaway

Imagine if you could talk to your baby.

Imagine if there was a way to teach your baby how to tell you how he or she is feeling.

Using Australian Sign Language (Auslan) as a guide, a book called Australian Baby Hands has been released to help parents communicate with their young children.

The Yarrowonga Chronicle has five books to giveaway to five lucky people.

Several childcare centres around Australia have already introduced the Australian Baby Hands Childcare Centre Pack, which helps to introduce baby sign language into the childcare centre environment.

Parents, carers and babies could be communicating questions, feelings, wants and needs well before the child develops the ability to form words.

Australian Baby Hands is available from their website www.australianbabyhands.com and all major bookstores nationwide.

To go into the draw to win a copy of this amazing book simply write your name, address and phone number on the back of an envelope and send it to:

Baby Book Competition

Yarrowonga Chronicle
PO BOX 147
Yarrowonga
3730

Or drop your entry into the Yarrowonga Chronicle office at 101 Belmore Street, Yarrowonga before 5pm Friday, April 7.